The following is an example of these skills.

I have a friend who is a line. He asked me to accompany him when he visited the ruins of an old art museum. He had been included in many paintings during the time that museum was a well known Center for the Arts and enjoyed thinking about those years.

As soon as we arrived, at what was left of the museum, he paused a long time gazing into the space that had once been the large main gallery. I noticed that every time he crossed over his own line it formed a container like shape. Within this shape he would catch memories of colors and events from the past. Then he floated to a corner where one of his favorite sculptures once stood. The memory of his sculpture friend was so vividly apparent that when he crossed over himself his form became similar to the same shape and color of that object.

When it was time to depart he flew out of the museum through a convenient window opening. Several times he became hesitant about leaving and turned around for one last look which formed another container shape. He filled it full of clearer and even more detailed memories. My friend was not one who lingers. I enjoyed watching him eagerly move ahead, ready for other awesome, active, adventures.
